Chris Friend • ENC1101 • Spring 2014

1. BACKGROUND

After reading one author's conceptualization of what it takes to make a discourse community, your job is to select a group of people you believe meets Swales' six defining characteristics and answer this question: How does the group you chose exhibit the characteristics of a discourse community? Present your conclusions in a paper at least two pages long.

2. PURPOSE

This assignment will help you understand what a discourse community is and how one of them functions. You will learn to think deeply about the use of written communication within a group, and you will examine how a group functions.

3. REQUIRED READING

For this assignment, you will need to read "The Concept of Discourse Community" by John Swales, pages 466–80 of your Writing about Writing (WAW) text.

TABLE 1. Grading Rubric

A	Evaluates how the combination of characteristics creates a sense of group identity
B	Illustrates a hierarchy of characteristics within the group
C	Explains, using examples, how the chosen group meets the characteristics
D	States that the chosen group is a discourse community in terms of the characteristics
F	Omits any claim that the chosen group qualifies as a discourse community

4. PROCEDURE

For this assignment, you are applying the characteristics identified by Swales on pages 471–73 of your WAW textbook. Show that a specific group you have been a part of is a discourse community.

- Before you write,
 - (1) brainstorm several groups you are (or have been) in that you think might be considered discourse communities and
 - (2) consider how those groups use text and language, then choose one group to study.
- In your paper,
 - (1) show how the group you chose possesses each of the six defining characteristics from Swales and
 - (2) find connections between characteristics to show how they help the group function.
- To make your paper exceptional, also
 - (1) identify which characteristics have greater priority than others, perhaps for group function or for new members seeking membership and
 - (2) show how the combination of those six characteristics form the group's sense of identity.

5. EVALUATION

Your task for this assignment is to identify a specific group of people as being a discourse community. Your work will be assessed using the evaluation criteria presented in Table 1.
